

Another black riot hushed up

CRIMINAL MOB ATTACKS POLICE IN LIVERPOOL BUT PUBLIC IS TOLD ALMOST NOTHING

ON FEBRUARY 5th, riot and mayhem broke out, yet again, in Toxteth, Liverpool. A mob estimated at about 500, predominantly black, went on a rampage against the police, hurling bricks and setting fire to cars. When the fire brigade arrived to put the fires out, they were attacked and driven out by the mobsters. The police said that the riot was the worst since 1981 — which would make it worse than another riot which occurred in 1985, about the same time as the infamous Tottenham conflagration.

But this time there was a big difference: while the 1981 and 1985 riots in Toxteth were given fairly prominent mass media coverage, this latest one was hardly mentioned.

Some reporting of it was given in the earlier news bulletins of the following day. By the evening, however, it had become virtually a non-event. Only one newspaper of which we are aware gave any prominent coverage to the trouble: this was the Daily Telegraph. The following weekend the Sunday Telegraph also mentioned it. But even these Telegraph reports underplayed the seriousness of the disorder. It should have made front page on all the newspapers the day after it happened, but in fact it did so in none!

This was very similar to the circumstances surrounding a disorder in Heath Town, Wolverhampton, which took place in May last year, also mainly involving Blacks. On that occasion there was a censorship of news about the event, just as there was in the case of the Toxteth trouble last month.

POLICE AMBUSHED

In the case of the recent Toxteth riot, it seems that more than just ordinary criminality was involved. Stolen cars were used to lure the police into the Granby Street area, one of the district's most notorious trouble-spots. When the police arrived, they were ambushed and surrounded by a ring of other cars, also mainly stolen. It seems as if the mob that then attacked them had been waiting for them, all 'tooled up' with bricks, bottles and other weapons. The whole affair had about it the hallmarks of a planned conspiracy the object of which was a deliberate confrontation with the police by the mobsters.

The riot went on for a considerable time — time enough for broadcasting services to hear about it and rush TV cameramen to the spot. Yet we are aware of no TV news films of the event — by contrast with the riots of a few years ago, in Liverpool and elsewhere.

TOXTETH, LIVERPOOL
Above: Two burnt-out cars, a legacy of rioting on February 5th this year. On right: a mob riots in the same area in October 1985. News of the more recent mayhem was played down by the media and in some cases never mentioned.

It seems abundantly clear that reporters of the mass media are now under orders — from which source is a matter for speculation — to black out, or at least play down, news of public disturbances when they involve black

MEANWHILE...

Released terrorist Mandela gets the papal treatment

A MAJOR PUBLIC DISTURBANCE breaks out in a city in Britain, and the mass media in this country consider it worthy of only minimal news coverage. A convicted terrorist gets released from jail in South Africa, and the same British media regard it almost as if it were the event of the century — a weird scale of priorities!

The picture on the left was taken at the time of his imprisonment in the sixties. Recently released, he was greeted by the British media as a world hero.

When Nelson Mandela was about to gain his freedom on February 11th, the BBC thought it appropriate to interrupt scheduled programmes to give a 'ball-by-ball' commentary on events. One would have thought the man in question was the Pope visiting Britain rather than a one-time criminal emerging into the light of day in a far-off country. Mandela was given a hero's welcome, not only by his own ANC supporters — which was to be expected — but also by our own TV commentators, press reporters and political leaders. Just who the hell, then, is this fellow Nelson Mandela? What is his contribution to mankind?

Mandela was convicted, back in 1962, of plotting a campaign of terrorism throughout South Africa directed at white and black alike. The evidence against him was overwhelming, and he did not himself even attempt to deny it. His trial was attended by observers from all over the world and was deemed by them to have been scrupulously fair.

Mandela should in fact have been hanged for his crimes, but instead the court, in a fit of undue lenience, gave him a term of life imprisonment. This he has served, not in an ordinary prison, but in a special place of detention in which he enjoyed all the home comforts. He had no cause to complain of his fate.

On his release, not only did the media in this country jump for joy and fawn on him as if he were saint and saviour rolled into one, even Mrs. Thatcher expressed her great satisfaction and immediately invited him to come to Britain to be a guest of her Government.

And this is the same Mrs. Thatcher who is constantly proclaiming to the world that we

MINORITY-ISM IN THE ARMED FORCES AND BRITAIN'S FALLING BIRTHRATE

ELSEWHERE in this issue we have touched on the issue of feminism in the Navy. The scene shown with the item in question is a warning of what Britain's armed forces may look like in a few years' time if Tory Defence Secretary Tom King, with the full backing of the Government, gets his way. It exhibits two Wrens being shown around a destroyer by a rating, following a decision to allow women to serve aboard operational warships.

Partly of course this decision, and what may come of it, is the result of minority-ism — of both the ethnic and feminist brands — running amok through Britain's national life. Not surprisingly, our armed forces are not being spared. The Army is already being pressurised from on high, not least by HRH Prince Charles, who wants more 'ethnics' in the Guards.

The American experience shows where all this can lead. US forces are fully 'integrated' and 'equalised' across the board. A delegation of British naval officers visiting America's biggest aircraft carrier, the Nimitz, some years ago were surprised to learn that some sections of the ship were off limits to crew members. The reason? If the latter were to venture there, they would be in danger of being mugged, or even murdered, by their black shipmates!

The pride, discipline and 'esprit de corps' of the US forces have been further undermined by the wholesale recruiting of women to perform the same tasks as men. Many of these are butch, heavyweight bull-dykes. Of the remainder, at any one time a large proportion are likely to be pregnant.

All this has been the outcome of putting 'equality' above operational efficiency. Yet it now seems that Britain's armed forces are to be pushed down the same road by her politicians, regardless of the US experience.

In addition to minority-ism as an end in itself, the reduction of our forces to the kind of ninth-rate quality that is likely to emerge from this process is also being defended on the grounds that the British birthrate has collapsed and that there are simply not enough white male recruits to go round. One of the main factors in this fallen birthrate is the discouragement given to women to seek their fulfilment in motherhood. Yet, far from recognising this and correcting it, officialdom is doing the very reverse in encouraging women to serve in the armed forces in exactly the same capacity as men — thus creating a vicious circle!

Our young women should — always allowing for a sensible number of exceptions — be encouraged to return to the proud and honourable profession of motherhood — surely the most important position in society, since if there are going to be any future generations of Britons these must first be born.

Urgency was recently given to this by UN Spokesman Nafis Sadik. Addressing the 'One Asia Assembly' recently, Sadik said that the cause of 'zero population growth' has no attraction for Asians. They want to produce greater numbers of their own kind to populate the earth. Only Whites, it seems, desire racial self-extinction.

THE CHAOS OF 'INDEPENDENT' AFRICA

World Bank now forced to admit some of the truth

"We will show the world what the Black Man can achieve when he works in liberty."

Patrice Lumumba, communist terrorist and first dictator of the newly 'independent' former Belgian Congo — darling of western 'one-world' liberals.

THE LIBERALS who run the World Bank, an important arm of the 'one-world' internationalist establishment through which the hard-earned billions of the West are poured into so-called 'Third World development', have now been forced to come clean about a few of the results of Black African 'independence' from European rule, which they and their ilk originally did so much to promote. Some of the Bank's experts have now published a report describing the chaos that has broken loose under the Dark Continent's new tin-pot rulers since Britain and the other colonial powers scuttled and quit.

At the time just before its newly-won 'independence', Africa was portrayed as some sort of 'slumbering giant', about to awaken to prosperity and greatness once freed from European rule. But in fact, after anything up to 30 years of native rule, the World Bank now admits that the continent is locked into a downward spiral of incompetence, corruption and misgovernment from which, as things stand, there can be no escape.

The Bank confesses that, in the decades of 'independence', Africa has failed absolutely to make any economic progress at all. It is acknowledged that Africans have shown themselves utterly incapable of matching their productivity to their exploding numbers, and native living standards are just not improving at all — even getting worse, if that is possible.

Birthrate going through the roof

In the words of the report, "never in human history has population grown so fast." At the beginning of this century there were about 100 million Africans. By the time the movement towards 'independence' got under way in the 'fifties this had grown to some 250 million. Since then the number has doubled to 500 million, and, if things are allowed to take their present course, it will double again by the year 2010 to no less than 1,000 million!

But at the same time as this is happening production is reckoned to have come to a standstill, and the whole of Black Africa put together can manage a domestic product whose total value is a mere £86 billion — roughly that of Belgium!

Small wonder then that a quarter of the continent's population is already going hungry. Other pointers to African decline are such things as rising maternal mortality rates and falling enrolment of native offspring in such schools as exist.

To add to these problems, the natural environment is being destroyed in double-quick time from one end of Black Africa to the other. Trees are being felled no less than 30 times faster than they are being planted, leaving behind a creeping desert of saline and infertile soil. What good soil remains is in turn being worked to death by native farmers on their small subsistence plots, these farmers only understanding the most primitive forms of agriculture.

Elsewhere, nomads and other tribesmen, whose wealth is measured in head of livestock, allow their herds to over-graze the land, further destroying vegetation and adding to desert.

Everyone to blame but the African!

African politicians try to make excuses for the shambles that has grown up under their rule. They argue, for example, that Africa suffers from adverse terms of trade in the sale of its produce on world markets, meaning that the value of its food and raw material exports is in decline as against the cost of its manufactured imports from the West and from Asia. But the World Bank report denies this. For most of the last 30 years the terms of trade have in fact favoured Africa, and there is no good economic reason why African primary producers — like Uganda, with its coffee, and Ghana, with its cocoa — should be losing their share of world markets to rivals in Asia or South America, as has been happening. Africa should in theory be more than competitive.

AFRICAN MISERY
Starving children with their mothers in Ethiopia. This fate affects at least a quarter of the population of the African Continent outside South Africa. Yet our rulers now want to export such conditions to South Africa itself.

Of course, the bottom line is that, in the eyes of the African rulers and their liberal defenders in the West, we in the West do not do enough for them. But the World Bank gives the lie to this too. It states outright that, whatever form aid to Africa has taken and whatever its quantity, it has largely been futile.

Lining of rulers' pockets

Financial aid from Britain and the West has been heavily plundered by Africa's rulers for their own self-enrichment. The World Bank report bluntly dismisses technical aid from western donors as useless. Hundreds of experts from Europe and America have been dispatched to Africa. But African productivity has plummeted just the same.

It is admitted by the World Bank's experts that, other things being equal, Africa's vast natural resources should be more than adequate to create a high level of prosperity. It is also spelt out that nothing whatever can be done to bring this about without a cure for the massive corruption and wholesale misgovernment that now grips the continent.

Yet true to the liberal bias of their World Bank paymasters, the experts stop short of acknowledging the obvious, commonsense solutions. In effect, all they come up with is still more of the same quack cures that have been tried and found wanting again and again over the past three decades. Thus, African leaders are somehow or other to be made 'more accountable' to their peoples. On top of this, as might have been guessed, more western money is to be given in aid, albeit on what are called 'stricter terms'.

African 'democracy' never worked

As for 'accountability', Africans themselves have only ever been interested in being ruled by dictators. Western-style 'democracy' is alien to their outlook, and wherever it has been tried in Africa it has always amounted in practice to 'One Man, one vote — one time'. It could be said that it was precisely as a result of our trying to make government in Africa 'accountable' to the African masses, through decolonisation and majority rule, that the present corrupt regimes came about to begin with.

This being so, the hard truth is that Africa, on the World Bank's own showing, is little better than a feckless parasite that can do nothing for itself.

Yet this is the fate that our leaders now want to impose on the one remaining country in Africa where there is order, progress and comparative prosperity for all races: South Africa. For if the Whites in South Africa give way, as Mrs. Thatcher and others in this country want them to do, and let the non-Whites take over, there is not the slightest doubt that South Africa will join all the other African countries in the merrygoround of chaos, poverty, misery and corruption.

JOHN MORSE

Overseas aid: time for us to call the tune

ETHIOPIA is said to be on the brink of yet another famine. Once again, the voices of liberal bleeding hearts and others are raised in demands for yet more public and private charity to be given by Britain and the West — all of it, as usual, free of any strings.

Elsewhere on this page, there is an outline of a recent World Bank report's account of the anarchy of the African continent under native rule, and the uselessness, to use no stronger word, of western aid under present conditions. Nowhere do these conditions prevail more dramatically than in Ethiopia.

Overpopulation, impoverishment and ecological ruin are Ethiopia's lot at least equally with the rest of the continent. On top of this, yet another local characteristic is well to the fore.

Amid the continent's reigning chaos, the tribal hatreds always simmering just below the surface of the ethnic patchwork making up Africa's population are for ever on the point of erupting into outright revolution, war and massacre, as group fights group for control of the continent's shrinking living space and resources. This is partly what lies at the root of so much of the vainglorious military spending of Africa's tyrants, each of whom has his own tribal loyalties.

GENOCIDAL WAR

Unable to get more efficient work and production out of their subjects, these glorified tribal chieftains have the natural impulse to relieve the population pressures underlying the existing shambles by waging armed genocide against rival groups. Thus, Ethiopia's maniac dictator, Mengistu Haile Mariam, following in the footsteps of the country's former 'Emperor' Haile Selassie, has been trying for some years, by means of such military campaigns, to wipe out the maximum number of Eritreans, Tigreans and other assorted rebels in various parts of his now disintegrating 'empire'. To do this, he has been fitting out his forces with Soviet weapons paid for from Ethiopia's dwindling wealth, in the end succeeding only in making the country poorer than ever.

The various tribal insurgents have for their part been returning the compliment in the course of their rebellion against Mengistu. In the upshot, Ethiopia is now caught in a vicious circle of famine, leading to war, which in turn leads to greater famine, with whole populations being uprooted from the land as refugees by the growing savagery of the fighting.

The never-ending warfare thus makes western charity, whether state or private, at best irrelevant as a means of solving the problems which the public of the western nations is told that it is supposed to solve. But even were it not for this, the only possible effect of such aid could be to subsidise Ethiopia's population explosion yet more, making for still greater famine in the future.

For Britain and the West to give aid in this way does not make any sense whatever, even in terms of the claimed objective of relieving famine. But what is at least as much to the point, it serves no British or western interest at all. Such charity can only turn those given it into subsidised dependents of the West. This is merely to drain western resources with nothing at the end to show for it. What is more, it carries the risk that liberals and other powerfully placed traitors inside western countries may finally exploit these new dependents of theirs as yet another source of 'Third World' immigrants with which to flood the West itself.

This being so, the time has come when aid to Afro-Asia, if given at all, should be placed on an altogether new footing. This would mean its no longer being given as 'something for nothing'.

Aid should, in fact, if anything, be a means of advancing the national interests of its donors. To this end, it should be given by such countries as Britain strictly in exchange for hard political, economic, strategic and other advantages from the countries receiving it. In some cases, for example, the recipients might be required in return to accept a number of Britain's Afro-Asian immigrants for resettlement under a British policy of repatriation. In other cases, especially where Africa is concerned, a condition of aid might include outright British recolonisation. In all cases, aid would be linked to the recipient country's restraining its population growth.

But whatever happens, it is clear that Britain and the West cannot forever go on taking unlimited responsibility for the 'Third World' without power going with it.

Who pays the piper is entitled to call the tune!

MENGISTU

should take a firm and uncompromising stand against terrorists!

But at least the circumstances surrounding Mandela's release have had one good result.

They have told us a great deal about the people who control our mass media and about our political leaders: about the people who are running Britain.

When a leading terrorist is released from jail in South Africa, it is great news. When a gang of young black thugs conduct a reign of terror in a British city, it is scarcely news at all!

There is something damned sinister going on in this country, is there not?

WHY CHANGE POLICE RULES TO SUIT THE 'ETHNICS'?

SCOTLAND YARD, so it is reported, is about to abolish its minimum height requirement as part of a drive to obtain more recruits from the 'ethnic minorities'. What the Yard clearly has in mind is to recruit more Asian police officers, as it is people from that racial group, rather than West Indians, whose height average is considerably lower than that of native Britons.

The present minimum height for recruits to the Metropolitan Police is 5ft 8in for men and 5ft 6in for women. In the quest for more Asians in the force, this is now going to be lowered substantially.

We fail to see why. There were perfectly good reasons in the first place for introducing certain physical qualifications for police recruits in respect both of height and physique. Police, it should hardly need stating, have to deal regularly with trouble-makers who may get violent. Small police officers will not only be at a physical disadvantage in these situations, they will also be less favourably placed to exercise the psychological effect on the would-be trouble maker that is necessary to discourage him. These things apart, an aura of authority is a desirable part of a police officer's personal equipment, and it is a fact that, other things being equal, larger men (or women) are better able to project such an aura than smaller ones.

It is for these perfectly sound reasons that the police in the past have insisted that their officers are medium-to-tall in stature and of reasonably strong build.

This is no disparagement of small people, who have a great variety of occupational fields in which they can excel and succeed, and in some of which smallness is even an asset. Racehorse-owners, for example, will not be likely to engage 14-stone six-footers as jockeys. No-one thinks that this is unfair 'discrimination' against 14-stone six footers; it is just accepted as common sense.

Clearly, this latest piece of tomfoolery by Scotland Yard has nothing whatever to do with making our police more efficient and effective. It is just a piece of politics, adopted as a result of political pressures exercised by the Home Office in yet another cheap attempt to win the favour of the country's racial minorities, and it is similar to the lowering of standards of mental aptitude which earlier were adopted so as to take in more Blacks. In the face of a massive crime-wave, we cannot afford to let police procedures be governed by political considerations. Both these schemes are essentially political and they both stink to high heaven. They should be thrown out without further ado.

Caught in the act!

ONE popular pastime of the opponents of our movement is to report stories — true or untrue — of 'racist' outrages, such as the daubing of immigrant homes with 'racist' slogans, and then claim that we are responsible. Sometimes of course these 'outrages' extend beyond the use of paint and involve actual damage to property. It all makes heart-rending reading, and maybe leads a few stupid people to think what awful folk we are.

In fact these kinds of actions serve our cause not one iota, and we forbid our supporters to engage in them. When, nevertheless, they are continually reported, it leads us to wonder if our enemies themselves have not done the dirty work just to get us blamed for it.

Fanciful thinking? Not exactly, for some cases have been proven to have originated in just that way. The latest such case comes from the States.

Female New York law student Laurie

LAURIE RECHT
Committed 'racist' outrage against herself

Recht got big headlines last year when swastikas and death-threats were painted on the outside walls of her flat, one of which said "Death to the Jews!"

Supported by the Jewish Anti-Defamation League of New York, Miss Recht demanded an FBI investigation and police protection, since this was a case of 'racist' intimidation. The FBI set up a hidden camera across the street to catch the vandals.

Then one night they photographed someone walking by and looking in all directions to see if anyone was in sight. This person then sprayed up swastikas on the walls of the flat again. At this point the police rushed in to catch the offender. And who should it be but none other than Miss Recht herself!

The newspapers, which had been loud in their headlines when it was thought that the young lady had been the victim of 'racist' daubings, turned strangely silent when the truth of the matter came out. A few reports did appear but they were not large and Miss Recht's Jewish background was greatly played down. Eventually she was charged with lying to the police but was treated with extreme lenience (remember, this was New York City!), receiving a token piece of probation for an offence which normally would have led to a jail sentence.

This was one 'anti-racist' who got caught out. It begs the question of how many others there are who stage these incidents who do not get caught.

So the next time you read a story in the papers about some poor Jew, Asian or Black who gets nasty BNP slogans and death-threats painted on his wall, just have a careful think before you leap to condemn us. Things ain't always what they seem!

And so say all of us!

"Will TV ever stop mentioning the War? I hate to sound unpatriotic but I'm bored stiff by nasty Nazis."
"We ought to send telly writers on a few history courses — to inspire them to dramatise other great victories, like Trafalgar or Rorke's Drift."

Garry Bushell (THE SUN, 31.1.90)

The Chinese in Canada: plenty problems

THOSE who are now pushing for the admittance of a quarter of a million Hong Kong Chinese into Britain are for ever telling us that we have nothing to worry about. The Chinese, they say, will blend easily into British society, will not be obtrusive and, all being financially well off, will not be a drain on British social services.

It all sounds very nice, but how will it actually work out in practice? Well, our racial cousins in Canada might be able to tell us a thing or two, for they have had a large Chinese population dumped on them for some years. These Chinese are, like the ones coming here, mostly from Hong Kong and have plenty of money.

Canada is one of the most 'liberal' of all the countries in the world in its attitude to race and immigration. In addition, it is comparatively uncrowded. Less than half the population of Britain live in an area bigger than the whole of Europe excluding Russia. Does this mean that Canada has had no trouble in assimilating its Chinese? Does it hell!

Some indication of how Canada is getting on with the new arrivals was recently given by an unusually frank report in The Sun — a paper owned by Rupert Murdoch and therefore decidedly not 'racist'. The report, written Richard Littlejohn, was disturbing to say the least.

According to Mr. Littlejohn, the prosperity of the Chinese immigrants, far from making integration with the host community easier, in fact made it much more difficult. Said the writer:-

"House prices in Toronto and Vancouver have gone through the roof as Hong Kong immigrants pay cash for the plot of land they want.

"Locals faced with high mortgage interest rates just can't compete and are being priced out of their old neighbourhoods. (writer's emphasis)

"In Britain we are told that the Hong Kong Chinese who are granted citizenship will simply vanish into the community. In Canada that just hasn't happened."

Mr. Littlejohn went on to describe a huge all-Chinese shopping centre, known as the Dragon Park Centre, which has been built in Toronto. As for being a customer at the centre, he said: "If you don't speak Chinese, you might as well not bother. Now it exclusively serves the 45,000 Chinese of Hong Kong descent living in the area."

This was not all. On the other side of the city was another massive Chinese shopping mall, all built in Chinese style and surrounded by what locals refer to as the 'Great Wall'.

At the other end of the country is Vancouver. This city is now nicknamed 'Van Kong'. Here, as in Toronto, the Hong Kongers have used their money to buy up large stretches of property, then bulldozed the existing tidy bungalows and put their own favoured structures in their place. Trees, which to the Chinese are supposed to bring bad luck, have been torn out of the ground or killed off, making for a tragic decline in the attractiveness of the neighbourhoods. Land, shops and office blocks, says Mr. Littlejohn, are all being snapped up by the Chinese and, as in Toronto, driving property prices sky high.

MASSIVE BACKLASH

All this is causing massive resentment among the natives in a land not in the past noted for racial trouble or for any powerful white-race backlash. But now Canadians' 'liberalism' is receding, as they find large areas of their country under foreign occupation and take-over. Littlejohn referred to one young lady of 25, Mary Lavin, who has had no previous political involvement but who has now founded an organisation in Vancouver which aims at resisting the drastic changes taking place in her city. "What is happening in Canada," she is quoted as saying, "hasn't been matched since the white people took the land from the Indians — and I think we're about to become Indians."

In short, the injection of large numbers of well-to-do Hong Kong Chinese into Canada — a country with far more empty space than Britain — has not brought harmony; it has brought a great deal of trouble. Canadians resent

PEKING? NO, TORONTO!
This is part of an all-Chinese shopping centre in the middle of Canada's largest city. Surrounded by what the locals call the 'Great Wall', it caters almost exclusively for the city's estimated 45,000 inhabitants.

it, and this resentment is likely to increase as the influx increases.

There will be some who will say that the Canadians are wrong — that they should not display 'racist' attitudes but should welcome the Chinese as contributors to the economy. Well, right or wrong, this is not how the white Canadians see it, and that is the reality which has to be recognised. The white Canadians are not really that much different from the British (from which 9-10 million of them are descended). We in Britain — whether rightly or wrongly is neither here nor there — resent seeing our country invaded and taken over, and many of us are now resisting.

All this adds up to just one more piece of evidence to support what we have been saying for years: that multi-racial societies do not work — whether in Britain, Canada or anywhere else.

Sex equality in the forces: the road to national defeat

EVERYWHERE the Government is now having to cope with the consequences of the nationally ruinous 'baby draught' that began in the degenerate 1960s.

The latest development is that senior Tory ministers, alarmed at the shortage of manpower in many key occupations, are urging the Prime Minister to provide more incentives to women to go to work, one of which would be the elimination of tax on child nurseries for working mothers.

Certainly such a move might have a marginally favourable effect in as much as it could reduce the present disincentives to women to bear children. On the other hand, it is appalling when seen in the context of the more general policy of having more women at the workplace.

No sane and reasonable person would wish to deny careers to those women absolutely determined on them. This, however, is very different from creating a social climate in which women are positively encouraged to pursue careers. Encouragement should be heavily weighted towards the woman as a housewife and mother. Only in this way will the nation be blessed with continuous generations of young men available to do the many jobs that men are required to do — the most important of these being jobs of a combative nature in the armed forces.

THE END OF THE NAVY?
New recruits being shown around one of HM's warships

This is why we believe that the current policy of encouraging women to perform the same tasks in the armed forces as men is a disastrous one, and one which, not only will mean less women building homes and raising children, but also a progressive deterioration in armed forces' fighting efficiency.

ANOTHER BATTY RULE FROM THE EUROCRATS' IVORY TOWER

HAVE YOU heard about the latest loony plan thought up by the Common Market bureaucrats? It is to introduce a standardised number-plate for all cars in the Community, irrespective of country. The plate will feature the blue and white multi-starred emblem of the EEC on the left, with the initials of the country of registration underneath it. Beside this will be a registration number which will be based on a common system for whole EEC area.

A senior EEC official said that the purpose of the scheme is to "help promote Community spirit."

The move has been greeted with singular lack of enthusiasm by British plate-makers and the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders, who regard it as impractical and nonsensical. So it is.

BIGGEST EVER JAPANESE TAKEOVER AS AS NIPPON CAPTURES BRITAIN'S LARGEST SURVIVING INDEPENDENT BEARINGS PRODUCER

Japs allowed to mug Britain again

THE WINSOME TWOSOME in the picture here look very pleased with themselves. It is a moot point which of them has the greater right to be so, given their respective interests in the matter in hand.

The Englishman on the right is Mr. Alan Bowkett, chief executive of what was until just recently Britain's biggest surviving bearings manufacturer, United Precision Industries (UPI). Mr. Bowkett is thought to have made quite a pretty pile for the UPI management team, of which he is the leading member, and which in 1987 became the firm's shareholders in a management buy-out backed up with bank loans.

Now, after having sold off UPI to the gentleman on the left of him, Mr. Sadao Hirano, supremo of the multi-national Jap giant Nippon Seiko (NSK), Mr. Bowkett and his colleagues are to share between them a private bonanza of some £22 million. What is more, as a further sweetener, the British firm's new oriental overlords have offered to take on the burden of the company's debt. Mr. Bowkett himself is to remain chief executive of UPI, but henceforth solely as an employee of NSK.

A cursory glance at UPI shows what, for their part, Mr. Hirano, his company and Japan have gained from the deal, the biggest ever Jap acquisition of any business in Europe. The Japs now control anything up to two-thirds of bearings output in the UK, most of it now in NSK's hands. Of the remainder, the largest part is owned by US or continental European firms.

BRIDGEHEAD FOR FURTHER JAP ASSAULT

By taking over UPI the Japs have also captured a number of UPI-owned concerns in Germany. They have thus consolidated a large section of the European bearings industry under their control in the run-up to the single Euro-Market in 1992, giving them a strong position from which to attack the rest. Britain once again has allowed itself to be reduced to the role of Jap bridgehead into Europe. Thus Mr. Bowkett's new Jap masters are the richer by having taken over a British firm that can serve them as a long-term strategic asset. There can be small doubt that this will add yet more clout to Japan's global economic offensive as a whole.

In a nutshell, you might say that Bowkett & Co. have made nice gains for themselves, but Hirano & Co. have made real gains for their country.

Of course, in any deal it is always swings and roundabouts. There must always be losers as well as winners. Number-one loser in this case is likely to be that poor old universal patsy of the modern world, Britain. As is obvious, nowadays ball-bearings are vital to any advanced nation's survival. Not a single piece of machinery on which modern life depends could do without them.

As recently as 1969, this fact was sufficiently obvious, even in Britain, for the Labour Government of the day, which routinely sacrificed the national interest in almost everything else, to take action in protecting this country's independent capability when it came to manufacturing this particular product. Ironically, UPI emerged from a government-sponsored all-British deal of that time designed to stop the nation's biggest producer, Ransome Hoffmann Pollard, falling under the control of the Swedish firm SKF. The official fear was that SKF might organise production, buying and research policies in a way not to Britain's benefit.

BRITISH INTERESTS LIKELY TO GO BY THE BOARD

So what's changed, it may be asked?

The only thing that has changed is that the Japs are likely to be much harder taskmasters than the Swedes would ever have been. They will be at least as ruthless in sacrificing Britain's national interests to their own when it suits their turn. Some hint of this comes from Mr. Hirano's declaration of intent towards UPI.

Expressing his satisfaction at the good 'fit' between NSK and UPI, he said he hoped to use his firm's "full power" in technology and finance to improve UPI manufacturing products and marketing. Going on past form with Jap takeovers, this is likely to mean, just for a start, that all design, research and development will be centralised in Japan. This function on its own amounts, in the words of one Tory MP, to "the lifeboard of any company." It is likely to be followed by the transfer of all other of UPI's key functions in the same way.

PLEASED WITH THE DEAL
The smile on the face of UPI boss Alan Bowkett indicates that he hasn't come badly out of the sell-out to Nippon Seiko (managing director on left here)

The end result? UPI, built up and maintained until now by British sweat and British brains, will steadily shrink to the status of a minor outpost of production in a multi-national Japanese conveyor-belt. It will be little more than an offshore metal-bashing operation, in which British workers will be not much better than semi-skilled serfs to their oriental masters, and British managers privileged lackeys paid to supervise them.

Moreover, much as the Japs might use honeyed words now, promising that there will be no redundancies among their British drudges, that could easily change in future. As things stand, there is nothing to prevent them, once there is universal free trade in Europe in the 'nineties, and they can then smash their continental European competitors as they have so many of those in Britain in the 'eighties.

BRITISH GOVERNMENTS HAVE BETRAYED NATIONAL INTEREST

What has really happened to Britain in the last 20 years is that the last traces of any view of an overall national interest, in terms of which the British economy should be organised, have now vanished from official thinking. Whatever the role of Mr. Bowkett and his fellow managers in selling out UPI, this is nothing to that of the Government in allowing them to do so. Mrs. Thatcher's attitude to the fate of British industry at the hands of Jap and other foreign competition has been described as one of "studied indifference." As never before, she and her Government have given priority instead to the making of fast bucks by international big money. As a result, Britain, the one-time workshop of the world, is being degraded into a minor assembly shed for foreigners.

It is because the Japs do not have such attitudes that, with national resources inferior to Britain's, they are becoming the industrial conquerors of the earth. This latest mugging of British industry at Jap hands ought to serve as a warning to this country that the writing is on the wall — if we do not change our ways.

WHY JAPAN SUCCEEDS

MANY IN BRITAIN, including Mrs. Thatcher and other top Tories who believe in opening up this country as a free market for foreigners, are currently whining about how 'unfair' the Japanese are in flooding Britain with their goods whilst closing Japan to ours. The Japs, they complain, are still not allowing the British nor any other foreigners so much as a toe-hold in their home market.

However much British and other western politicians and businessmen might clamour for the Japs to open up to their own goods, and however much the Japs might smile to their faces and promise to oblige, this is, it seems, never done. The extremes to which Japanese officialdom will go in devising nit-picking regulations to put the mockers on overseas producers' attempts to sell in Japan are notorious.

ANTI-IMPORT DODGES

Quite apart from differential sales-tax rates as between home- and foreign-produced goods, the Japs have a hundred and one other dodges to keep imports out. These range from changing the regulations for the wheel-nut sizes on imported cars from month to month, so as to give customs an excuse for turning back cars from abroad at the ports of entry, to making foreign firms sign import documents 20,000 pages long!

Not a British advert in sight

open to any number of Jap cars, radios, computer hardware, and so on. This being so, it is hardly surprising that Japan now enjoys a trading surplus of no less than £3.5 billion over Britain. The other side of this is that this is, of course, a big part of Britain's now critical deficit on her foreign trade, accompanying the present surge of inflation.

With profits like the Japs are making, it is not surprising that, to add insult to injury, they are now in a position simply to buy up whatever still survives of Britain's productive capacity for what, to them, amounts to little more than an old song. The takeover of Britain's UPI ball-bearings producer by Nippon Seiko is only the latest round in the investment blitzkrieg that the Japs have thus been able to mount on the back of their earlier export blitz.

DON'T BLAME THE JAPS; BLAME OURSELVES

But at the end of the day the Japs can hardly be blamed for not wishing to give their national substance away. If Britain chooses to do so, under Mrs. Thatcher's Tory regime of free trade and internationalism, they might as well argue, then the British have only themselves to blame.

There is one thing above all that the Japs do not allow: they do not allow their industrialists, bankers and speculators to get away with selling their land, industry and working people into alien serfdom for a quick profit. Vast as Jap industry's profits are, they are not gained at the nation's expense. In fact, quite to the contrary, these profits have risen with the rise of the nation as a whole. The state has taken the initiative in making sure of this.

Britain will not stop the Jap blitz until she takes a leaf out of Japan's book. As the comparison between the two nations shows, internationalism is a formula for failure, while nationalism is a formula for success.

people. Last month there was also a riot at Windsor Park football ground in Belfast, but this involved Whites. The result? The Belfast riot was given plenty of prominence on TV and in the newspapers. As for the Toxteth riot, millions never heard anything about it. One of our correspondents happens to live very near Liverpool. When we spoke to him some days later and asked him what he knew of the disturbance, he replied that he never even knew it had taken place!

In our July 1989 issue, published in the aftermath of the mainly black riot in Wolverhampton that had been hushed up by the mass media, we said that there clearly was a media conspiracy to play down, and if possible hide completely, news of urban disorders involving Blacks. What happened last month following the riot in Toxteth clearly bears this out once again.

We have said it again and again in British Nationalist: the multi-racial experiment in Britain is not working — in fact it is proving a disaster. The politicians and the mass media know this but are terrified of the British public coming to know about it. The result is that they are trying desperately to conceal from the British public the real truth about what is happening in our country wherever large concentrations of non-white immigrants have settled.

This is why the nation heard so little about the riot in Liverpool last month and why many indeed heard nothing at all.

This country of ours is being torn apart by racial conflict, and all the time that this is happening the truth is being deliberately concealed from the British people!

FOR SERVICES RENDERED!

EX-CHANCELLOR Nigel Lawson, it was reported last month, has been handed a nice plum job with the merchant banking section of Barclays Bank for which he will be paid £200,000 a year for working two days a week!

Just how Mr. Lawson will earn such money

LAWSON
Every reason to look pleased with himself in such time will seem a mystery to most people. But there is really no mystery. The former Chancellor has already earned his pay-off from high finance — like most politicians. This sort of sinecure awaits all national leaders who have rendered good services to the international financial establishment. Nice one, Nigel!

THE REAL REASON WHY MORTGAGES ARE GOING THROUGH THE ROOF

HOME LOANS last month went up to 15.4 per-cent — an all-time record. Millions of home-buyers were left groaning under this new and unprecedented burden. 'Conventional' financial wisdom will of course say that the rise was inevitable and that the Government couldn't avoid it. But this is nonsense.

What is it that constitutes the pressure on building societies to raise their lending rates? Very simply, the fact that they have to pay more interest to their account-holders in order to ensure that sufficient money is coming in to meet requests for mortgages.

And what is it that creates the pressure on them to do this? Again very simply, the fact that, if they do not, those account-holders will transfer their money elsewhere, where greater interest is to be earned.

And in a free international money market this could mean anywhere — not just in Britain but in the USA, in West Germany, in Japan — anywhere in the world.

Under these conditions, anyone, anywhere in the world, can force mortgage rates to rise in Britain — by the mere fact of offering such lucrative rates of interest to investors that building societies here have to jack their rates up to compete.

The same is of course true of bank lending rates, with which mortgage rates charged by building societies are closely intertwined. Only last October the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, Nigel Lawson, acting on the Government's behalf, raised the bank lending rate in response to the rise in the rate in West Germany. This in turn has had a strong influence in bringing the building societies to put up mortgage rates. Here is a classic example of how the international money market can make life misery for home-buyers in this country. It seems ludicrous that financial decisions made in Germany could have an effect on what we pay for houses in Britain, for what logical connection is there between the two things?

The answer is of course that there is an undoubted connection — as long as we are tied to the international financial system and must adjust the cost of borrowing money in Britain to the state of the international money market.

THE SOLUTION

The solution to this appalling state of affairs? Simple, but the Government will not adopt it; neither would the Opposition, if in office. The solution is to have a national financial system rather than an international one. Part of this change would be to impose strict government curbs on the movement of British money across the world, to keep British capital in this country — except in special cases where it is judged to be in the national interest to allow it to go overseas, special cases which would be determined by the decision of government.

Ah, you may say, but this does not prevent banks, building societies or other financial enterprises in Britain offering huge interest rates to those who deposit money with them, thus forcing others to do the same thing to attract the money they need.

The simple answer to this objection is that, so long as we are dealing with enterprises based in this country and falling within the compass of British law, our own Government can legislate to ensure that interest rates are kept down to a tolerable minimum.

To this there may be a second objection. Interest rates in Britain must be sufficiently high to leave the lenders with a profit after inflation. They must also, according to Tory wisdom, be sufficiently high to keep down the borrowing rate in the fight against inflation.

Nonsense again. As we pointed out in an article in these pages last month, inflation can be eliminated once and for all by the simple action of government of prohibiting the banks from 'lending' money in excess of the amounts they have in their own reserves, thus creating new money. Government should itself take over the entire function of creating new money and should do it interest-free. This is what will bring inflation to an end — providing that that government-created money is issued in accordance with real rises in national wealth.

THE TELLTALE SPIRAL
A rise of more than six per-cent in little over a year and a half.

With the end of inflation, lending rates, both in the case of banks and building societies, can be brought down to a fraction of what they are now, and still leave the lenders with a profit.

What our people should have to pay for houses should be related only to two things: the value of the land on which the house is built, and the cost of the labour and materials in building it. That is how things are in a sane economy. Our economy is an insane one, and that is why this month millions of house-buyers are wondering whether they face eviction from their own homes.

Big Mac in Moscow — big deal!

Our paper is only too pleased to see the people of Eastern Europe shake off communist tyranny. We wish them well. But let's not kid ourselves that they're going to be any better off importing the trashy customs of the liberal-capitalist West, as some would like them to do.

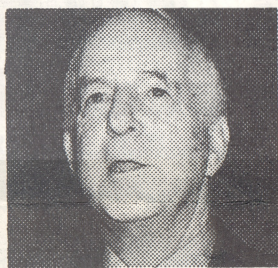

One such example is seen in the picture here, which shows the first McDonald's burger bar to be set up in Moscow. This was greeted by the mass media in Britain as a tremendous step forward towards 'civilisation'. On the contrary, it is symbolic of a life-style and a culture just as worthless as the ones the people of the former communist states are now getting rid of.

We think that there are finer things that the people of these one-time slave regimes have to look forward to, having liberated themselves, than junk food and coca cola, consumed against the background of jungle music — all of which money-grabbing folk in the West would now like to export to them.

Let's hope that these peoples of Eastern Europe reject the garbage that represents our contemporary western way of life just as vigorously as they have rejected Sovietism!

What do these four men have in common?

Ernest Saunders

Gerald Ronson

Sir Jack Lyons

Anthony Parnes

OBSVIOUS ANSWER: They are all defendants in the highly publicised 'Guinness Trial', now being held at Southwark Crown Court, at which they are accused of illegally manipulating share prices in order to help their company win a take-over bid for Distillers.

Ah yes, but what ELSE do the men all have in common? The first correct answer received at our office will entitle the sender to one extra free copy of British Nationalist. Not a terribly big prize? No, but not a terribly difficult competition. Let's have your answers soon!

THE PICTURE THAT SAYS IT ALL

THE PICTURE ABOVE captures our Prime Minister, Mrs. Margaret Thatcher, in perhaps her most symbolic pose. She is seen here at a meeting of the Board of Deputies of British Jews, to whom she made a bee-line last month to report her position on the question of pending German reunification. Not only does Maggie evidently consider that it is the prerogative of the British Prime Minister, instead of just of the Germans themselves, to have a say in what should be done about the unity of Germany, she evidently feels that Britain's Jewish community must be consulted every step of the way on the matter, as she so habitually does on a wide range of other issues that are supposed to be the purview of a British head of government.

Of course, Mrs. Thatcher's pious more, she remarked in comments that might puzzle the more gullible, Germany should, whatever happens, remain part of NATO, with American and 'other' troops stationed on her soil.

Many people have always assumed, having been endlessly so told, that NATO existed to protect us all from the supposed military menace of the Soviet Bloc. They have always been led to believe that American and other forces, including our own, were in West Germany in order to defend it from invasion by the Red Army, because it was not strong enough to do the job itself.

But now the Soviet Bloc is disintegrating. The current moves towards German unity are a part of this, and a united Germany should have a far lesser need (if we are to believe what we have pronouncements on what the Germans should do with their own country provide a convenient means of distracting the nation's attention from the appalling mess that we have at home.

Addressing the Jewish Board of Deputies, the Premier (in whose own North London constituency of Finchley the electoral tune is called by the hugely powerful Jewish bloc vote) saw fit to wag her finger in the direction of West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl. Singing the kind of song she most likely believed her audience would like to hear, she accused Kohl in her best preaching governess tones of going too fast in bringing together the two main sections of his own divided countrymen.

Said Mrs. T., any plan to join the two Germanies must be determined by

YOUR LETTERS

Sir, — Since your comments about the Channel Tunnel a short time ago, the expense involved in this extravaganza has escalated even further. This of course we all knew would happen. It is high time that the Government's big white elephant was abandoned once and for all, but we know of course that this will not happen. Face has to be saved, and there will be a massive loss of face if it is acknowledged that the Chunnel must be a write-off.

It is interesting that a Prime Minister and a Government who for the past ten years have been lecturing the nation on the importance of 'cost-effectiveness' in everything should be the champions of a scheme that in terms of cost-effectiveness has always been a total non-starter and can be seen as more so now than ever.

Your own analysis was right: the Channel

Tunnel was conceived from the first as a political rather than as an economically viable enterprise. The idea is to provide us all with a gigantic symbol of our 'European-ness'. Our masters have such a low estimate of our intelligence that they actually believe that, like wide-eyed children, we will be impressed!

Godstone, Surrey

Sir, I see that the powers-that-be are now preparing a scheme to empower the courts to determine fines for offences according to the income of the person convicted. You know what I scent in this? I scent a new means of making it easier for unemployed or lowly-paid Blacks, who constitute a very large portion of those brought up in court for offences liable to lead to fines. What is obviously happening now is that a large number of these Blacks who get fines fail to pay them.

BNP on TV this month!

A TELEVISION PROGRAMME about 'racism' in Scotland is being broadcast nationwide on Channel Four in the early evening of Saturday, March 17th. Great prominence in this programme is being given to the rise of the British National Party north of the border, and it features an interview with John Tyndall, also with Glasgow BNP Organiser Eric Brand and some other leading Scottish party activists, including Harry Mullin, whose speech made such an impact at the party's annual rally in London last October.

The programme is called Scottish Eye. In addition to its nationwide showing on the 17th March, a repeat will be shown in Scotland only on the following Monday.

All those who have friends, relatives or acquaintances who may be interested in the BNP should ensure to tell them of the programme so that they may have a chance to see it.

Colour photos please!

Will all those taking photos of BNP activities with a view to their being printed in this paper please note that colour should be used. This is necessary for speed of development.

BNP on the march in Nottingham

NOTTINGHAM, ancient East Midlands city of Robin Hood and High Sheriff fame, represents one of the most spectacular growth areas for the British National Party during the past few months. Nottingham citizens are getting angry about what is being done to their neighbourhoods — the coloured immigrant take-over has reached a point where the High Sheriff himself is now a West Indian. And Nottingham is turning to the BNP!

A few months ago the party was struggling in the area. It had just a tiny nucleus of activists there, and they depended heavily on the stronger Leicester Branch down the M1 for activities to be generated. Now Nottingham is making the pace and can stand on its own. In the middle of last year a meeting in the city could only bring about a dozen together, and many of these from Leicester. But on February 12th, at the first meeting to be addressed by John Tyndall in the city, no less than 80 were present, only five of them from Leicester and the remainder from Nottingham itself, the surrounding county and Derbyshire. Very welcome was a minibus party from Mansfield, where a budding group has sprung up.

The meeting was also addressed by East Midlands Regional Organiser John Peacock and local activist Carl Brown.

Mr. Tyndall in his speech referred to the dramatic changes now taking place in Eastern Europe whereby political opinions which a short time ago would have put the opiner in the gulag are now being expressed openly. This new glasnost, Mr. Tyndall said, will eventually come to Britain, and opinions that are beyond the pale today will become embraced by millions tomorrow. This, he predicted, would all happen in the 1990s, a decade which is going to change the world totally.

We would like to name individuals who deserve credit for the party's growth in Nottingham but we have been asked not to so as to avoid causing embarrassment to them in their places of employment. Glasnost, while on the way, has not come to Britain yet! We will just content ourselves, therefore, with congratulating Nottingham BNP as a team for their tremendous progress over the past months.

Many thanks!

This month, as will be noticed on this page, three more local BNP addresses are added to our list, those of Milton Keynes, Nottingham and Edinburgh. We have reported on the progress of these units in recent past issues, while we cover the recent Milton Keynes rally on the next page.

The BNP Edinburgh unit has received enormous help in getting on its feet from Glasgow Branch, whose activists are now taking the broader regional view and serving as pilots for the development of the BNP all over Scotland. Edinburgh BNP has asked us this month to publish an official thanks on their behalf to the Glasgow Branch for all the assistance it has given, which we do with pleasure.

SUPPORT THE INNER LONDON SIX!

CHRISTMAS 1988 was much like any other, with people going out and having a good time. This is except for one group of friends — all nationalists — who left the Duke of Wellington pub in Kings Cross before going home to South London.

On the tube train home a vicious fight broke out at London Bridge. Four girls — all BNP supporters — who had been singing Bing Crosby's White Christmas were violently attacked by an Arab travelling with his French wife. All four girls were hit repeatedly — one being knocked clean out and another being badly cut on the eye. Naturally, the girls defended themselves but they were no match for the Arab. Three young men accompanying them — again all nationalists — leapt to their defence.

Mark Harvey, sometimes known as 'Bear', kept the train doors open to let the girls escape while the two other men piled into the Arab. One of them, Joe Bunting, can be proud of giving the Arab back some of his own medicine, while another (who cannot be named) taught the latter a real lesson by surgically removing one of his kidneys. This patriot then rushed off to keep an urgent appointment elsewhere!

Incredibly, when the police arrived, instead of arresting the Arab for GBH and ABH on the girls, they arrested all six nationalists on the grounds of violent disorder! Not a word about the cut eye, black eyes, cut lip, concussion and bruises our girls sustained. Not a word about the Arab's attack on four defenceless girls!

At one time the police even had the nerve to charge one of the girls with stabbing the Arab, but at the trial at the Inner London Crown Court this charge was dropped. The bitter end of this story is that all four girls, despite being violently attacked, were found 'guilty' of violent disorder and sentenced to eighteen months imprisonment for their first offence! Joe Bunting, who defended the girls, also got eighteen months and Mark Harvey, who didn't touch the Arab, got two years!

During the trial a West Indian train guard, to his great credit, testified that the Arab had started the trouble and struck the first blows. But this did not impress the judge in the least.

The injustice of this case has shocked even neutral observers.

With this report, we are appealing to readers to come up with the cash and make life inside a little easier for the Six and to help Mark Harvey's young wife, who is bringing up two small children. Send all donations to The Six, PO Box 117, Welling, Kent DA16 3DW.

You can also write to the Six to express your support and sympathy. Joe Bunting is No. MT3128 and Mark Harvey is No. MT3124, and both are at HMP Brixton, Jebb Avenue, London S.W.2. The girls are Dionne East (No. TR2054) and Nancy Bonny (No. TR2052), both at HMP Holloway, Parkhurst Road, London N7 0NU, Kay Dwelly (No. TR2053) at HMP Bullwood Hall, Hockley, Essex SS5 4TE, and Louise Ager (No. TR2051) at HMP Drake Hall, Ecclestone, Staffs. ## BNP focus on the regions: (6) THE MIDLANDS

LAST YEAR, the British National Party exploded into national prominence, and as part of this the BNP in the Midlands spread the party's message to more people than ever before.

The BNP started 1989 with just two full-sized units in the Midlands: the Leicester and Birmingham branches. From these two strongholds a wave of BNP publicity material has gone out, resulting in the setting up of a Nottingham unit and the subsequent expansion of this unit into a powerful branch, also in the revitalisation of the party in North Notts.

The sheer volume of leaflets, British Nationalists, posters and stickers going out has increased enormously as the BNP publicity machine has fed the pace of growth.

In Birmingham, many thousands of leaflets, British Nationalists and stickers have gone out, and the growth area for the West Midlands in the near future is likely to be to the west of Birmingham. Activity has been stirring in Oldbury, Tipton and Dudley and new groups could soon emerge there.

The East Midlands has seen the biggest growth of the two regions, with vast numbers of items of literature going out over the entire region. Paper sales have gone up significantly over the past year, with British Nationalist now sold on doorsteps as well as in newsagents, pubs and clubs.

BNP literature has been distributed in no less than 44 towns, cities and even villages in the Midlands. In Lincolnshire, Lincoln, Market Rasen, Boston, Sleaford, Grantham, Skegness, Market Harborough, Lutterworth, Hinckley and Melton Mowbray have all received attention from BNP activists. Even villages such as Chapel St. Leonards, Kirtley, Leadingham and Faldingworth (Lincs), Radcliffe-on-Trent, Bingham and Lowdham (Notts) and Glenfield, Great Glen, South Wigston, Mountsorrel, Syston, Birstall and Kegworth (Leics) have been visited. Northamptonshire still remains a rather fallow area as far as the BNP is concerned, but a start has been made with a publicity drive in Kettering.

The biggest growth point for the BNP in the East Midlands has undoubtedly been Nottinghamshire. The Nottingham unit has grown enormously. At the same time, word of the exciting growth of the BNP has spread, and enthusiasm for the party has generated solid support in Mansfield.

A measure of BNP support in Notts can be gauged by the meeting recently addressed by John Tyndall in Nottingham, which attracted 80 people, nearly all from the county.

The hostile media blackout of the BNP has been smashed time and time again by the BNP forcing its way into the headlines. BNP rallies in Leicester and Birmingham last year were covered, along with the wave of national publicity the BNP received and which was heard in the Midlands. The 'Battle of Welling', the picket at the 'holocaust' conference and the Tyndall TV interview accompanying the rally in Bradford were all reported in the area. Then there was the BNP Summer Camp near Buxton, in Derbyshire, which was also widely reported — helped by the yells of protest in the House of Commons from Leicester West MP Greville Janner. Janner was so desperate to denounce the party he hates that he failed to notice that he was jerking to strings pulled by the BNP.

This year the BNP intends to make another major effort right across the Midlands, with the two major events being rallies in Nottingham at the end of this month and in Wolverhampton in July.

RACE WAR

London's East End erupts after vicious attacks on Whites

DURING the last week of February, race war broke out in East London after two vicious attacks on white people by Asian gangs. Following the first of these attacks, over 300 Whites marched through the Bethnal Green area, urging police to take prompt and vigorous action to protect the white community from further assaults. In the evening following the march, another vile attack was carried out against a white man in full view of his family. He is on the critical list in hospital at the time this report goes to press.

YET HARDLY A WORD ABOUT THIS ERUPTION OF RACIAL WAR HAS APPEARED IN THE MEDIA!

In the middle of February John Stoner (17), a pupil at Morpeth School in Tower Hamlets borough, was stabbed by a group of Asians in the school in the course of an argument. He was critically ill for some days but is now expected to recover. The police have treated the incident as a racial attack.

Following this stabbing, local white people organised the march. This was a spontaneous initiative by local citizens who had no political connections or motives. Local members of the British National Party did support and join in the march but it was not a BNP-sponsored event.

The march took place on Saturday, February 24th. Only a minority taking part belonged to the BNP, as the party was holding a rally in Milton Keynes on the same day and most of its supporters were attending that event.

Observers at the East End march testify that the temperature was at boiling point, with large numbers of the marchers (though not any of the BNP members) shouting "Kill the Pakis!" Afterwards a great many Asian properties in the area had their windows smashed. We do not condone either these slogans or actions — as it is wrong to take it out on the whole Asian community for the misdeeds of some individuals amongst them. But these things do give some indication of how high feelings were running.

At the start of the march Phil Maxwell, leader of the Labour group on Tower Hamlets Borough Council tried to persuade the marchers not to proceed, saying that the march was a 'racist' one. He was turned on by the assembled crowd and had to be rescued by the police from serious injury.

Despite all this, the mass media played down the affair almost to the point of totally ignoring it. Some limited coverage of developments was given in the Sunday Correspondent, but there was little else. As with the riot in Liverpool with which we have dealt on the front page of this issue, there was a massive and contrived media cover-up. The media of course are only interested in 'racial attacks' when they are committed by Whites against non-Whites!

A further attack followed in the evening after the march. George Sweeney (38), a local White, was driving down a street in the area in his car and accompanied by his family when the car was attacked by a mob of Asians throwing bricks, and some of the car windows were broken. Mr. Sweeney immediately got out of the car to challenge the attackers, and was thereupon set upon. Despite his putting up a vigorous defence, he was overwhelmed by weight of numbers. The Asians hit him in the face with a machete and baseball bats, and then stabbed him. He is now on the critical list, as stated.

This affair in the East End represents a spontaneous grass-roots white backlash against multi-racialism, with very little prior political organisation.

Now, however, the BNP has stepped in and is helping in the organisation of white defence, and the party is gradually winning the local Whites over to the idea that lawful political action against the multi-racial policies of the Government and Borough Council is the correct solution.

BNP beats council rally ban

THE MEETING HALL advertised on this page last month as the venue of the British National Party rally in Milton Keynes was denied to the party subsequently by the local authority after it had given the BNP an initial booking — just one more sample of Mrs. Thatcher's glorious British 'democracy'. In the event the BNP, determined not to be defeated, took to the outdoors and held a successful meeting on a piece of parkland a short distance from the hall.

Milton Keynes, not being a proper town with a town centre, is a very difficult place to muster people for a meeting of this kind. Considering this, the attendance of just under 100 was a good effort — bearing in mind also that party forces were split on the day between this rally and the white people's march in Bethnal Green. Milton Keynes Organiser Richard Fawcus was able to mobilise a goodly number of interested local people in attendance. Opposition was promised from the left, but when it turned up it was pathetic. A mere two dozen hecklers stood a safe distance from the BNP contingent and were laughed out of sight.

'international agreement'. What is always been told for foreign armies to be present on its soil at all. For one thing, any Soviet 'threat' that might have been thought to exist up to now has, as a result of all this, vastly receded.

KEEPING GERMANY DOWN

But not a bit of it!

If Maggie is to be believed, a whole new purpose — or at least a purpose hitherto not talked about too publicly — has been revealed for NATO. The implications of what Mrs. T. is saying are that NATO, including our own very expensive British Army of the Rhine, are in Germany henceforth for little other purpose than to occupy that country and hold it down!

The Prime Minister seems to have been hinting at this when she said: "We want to ensure that Germany's unification does not become a new source of instability." It is not known whether, when she said "we," she meant to include her Jewish audience along with herself as the ones who are to determine what Britain's relations with Germany are to be. Nor is it known whether it was out of special concern for the feelings of members of that audience that she went out of her way to make it plain that Britain's efforts would be used, once more, to ensure that Germany did not recover any of that portion of her national territory that was seized from her in 1945, amid scenes of rape and massacre against women, children and old folk, by the Russians, Poles and Czechs.

But one thing is for sure. Whoever else might have gained from it, the effort that Britain has squandered in two world wars this century to keep Germany down and divided has cost her dear. Following the loss of some of her best blood in those two wars, Britain has in fact nothing good whatsoever to show for any of this sacrifice.

Her Empire and world power have sunk without a trace as a direct result. Since the end of World War II her leaders have shackled her to the United States and to the interests of international finance. Her armed forces have been put at the disposal of NATO's transatlantic command. She has been entangled in the web of the EEC. Her enfeebled economy has been abandoned to the mercy of foreigners. At home, British society has been allowed to degenerate towards the level of a demoralised Third World slum.

Anyone might have thought that with a pigsty like this in her own back yard Britain's Prime Minister should have found better things to occupy her mind than continually trying to frustrate the Germans. This is the game whereby Britain's rulers have dragged her into the present mire. But such a lesson of history seems to have been totally lost on the Prime Minister, who sounds as if she is quite ready to repeat all the follies of the past.

We can only say that, whatever a big political pay-off there might be for Margaret Thatcher personally in pandering to influential interest-groups by setting Britain against Germany, the lesson of the 20th century is that there is no gain whatever for Britain itself.

What we stand for

- The establishment of a government of national unity that will put an end to nationally-divisive party warfare; the return of leadership and statesmanship to British affairs
- A end to immigration and a start to repatriation
- British withdrawal from the Common Market
- The disbanding of the multi-racial Commonwealth and its replacement by a new Commonwealth of self-governing white states
- British ownership and control of British industry and resources
- Protection of British industry by the selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from Britain
- An end to the financial swindle that causes inflation and slump, and its replacement by a sane and fair financial system that will give the people the purchasing power to buy the goods they produce
- The subordination of the power of the City to the power of government, and the harnessing of the City to the needs of British industry
- The regeneration of British farming with the object of achieving the maximum possible self-sufficiency in food production
- A healthy environment for a healthy people — the protection of our countryside and an end to the architectural disfigurement of our towns and cities
- Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty
- An alternative defence strategy: withdrawal from NATO, closure of all foreign military and air bases in Britain, the strengthening of Britain's defences and a position of armed neutrality
- A end to overseas aid and the allocation of the money saved to the financing of repatriation and greater help for the needy at home
- The crushing of the IRA, the termination of the Anglo-Irish Agreement and firm support for the loyalist majority in Northern Ireland
- Repeal of the laws permitting homosexuality and abortion (except where the latter is the result of rape or necessary on medical grounds), the wiping out of AIDS and a return to healthy moral values aimed at strengthening the family and community
